I want to set the timer on my html5 pages. When the user clicks the back button, the timer will start counting from 0, 2, 4, 8,... until they press the back button. I am new to jquery. But I have some experience in working with android and javascript. I don't know jquery very well. Any help will be appreciated. A: For your information, You can use the android keypress or some browsers Keypress event to solve this problem. If you want to run your timer, you should add a timer using setInterval, every time it runs, get the window.open object, then get the current document object. Try this: `var timer=window.setInterval(function(){ var oldDoc=window.open.document; var newDoc=window.document; if(!newDoc.hasOwnProperty('isSaved')) return; //save document newDoc.isSaved=true; oldDoc.close(); //remove timer window.clearInterval(timer); },100);` Q: How to get a private API for the code below? I have a code like this, which I'd like to replace by simply declaring some variables as private. How can I do this? `class Test extends Component { constructor() { super(); this.state = { items: [`
